Potato News

UK potato prices are currently up 30% year-on-year (y-o-y) due to a decline in production. This is due to potato output in the UK falling 5% y-o-y for 2016/17 to 5.2m metric tons, 2% below the five-year average and this is despite an increase in planted area.

Yields in 2016/17 are estimated at 44.9 metric tons per hectare, which equates to a reduction of 8% on last year, this is due to adverse weather throughout the growing season. To compound the problems planting was delayed in spring due to cold and wet weather conditions, while higher rainfall and fewer sunshine hours affected the development of crops between April and July. In addition, the harvest was delayed in September and October due to dry weather.

This decline in production saw UK potato stocks fall to their lowest level since 2012/13 to 2.9m metric tons in November. Prices in the UK have also strengthened due to scarce supplies elsewhere in Europe. To date Freshview have absorbed most of the price increases however we have arrived at the point of having no options left other than look to introduce increases in prices on all U.K. grown potatoes and prepared potatoes.
